

Keep Newfoundland and Labrador frack-free

Fracking is proven to be environmentally unsound, and likely dangerous too. It should not happen anywhere. Newfoundland is no exception. We visit this province almost every summer, and value its unsullied beauty. We can drink the water when we hike, and we can feel a part of nature as it is meant to be enjoyed.

I believe that the low-socioeconomic realities of Nfld have made communities vulnerable to being manipulated into believing the upsides outweigh the downsides.

The over use of fresh water to facilitate the process begs yet another environmental question...that is really not a question at all! And the idea of further contaminating it with toxins is outrageous.

As a tourist, this would deeply negatively impact my desire to go there. I don't want to see and grieve the damage, nor do I want to be exposed.

Sincerely,

H. Cribbin
